

STR

11. To cause to found by blows. With up only emphatical. The drums presently striking up a march, they plucked up their ensigns, and forward they go. Kneller.
Strike up the drums, and let the tongue of war Plead for our interest, and our being here. Shakespeare.
 12. To forge; to mint. Some very rare coins struck of a pound weight, of gold and silver, Constantine sent to Chilperick. Arbutnot.
 13. It is used in the participle, I know not well how, for advanced in years. The king Is wife and virtuous, and his noble queen Well struck in years; fair and not jealous. Shakespeare.
 14. To STRICK off. To erase from a reckoning or account. Deliver Helen, and all damage else Shall be struck off. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida. I have this while with leaden thoughts been prest; But I shall in a more convenient time Strike off this score of absence. Shakespeare's Othello. Ask mens opinions: Scoto now shall tell How trade encreases, and the world goes well: Strike off his pension by the letting fun, And Britain, if not Europe, is undone. Pope.
 15. To STRICK off. To separate as by a blow. Germany had stricken off that which appeared corrupt in the doctrine of the church of Rome; but seemed nevertheless in discipline still to retain therewith great conformity. Hosker. They followed so fast that they overtook him, and without further delay struck off his head. Kneller. He was taken prisoner by Surinas, lieutenant-general for the king of Parthia, who struck off his head. Hakewell. A mass of water would be quite struck off and separate from the rest, and tolt through the air like a flying river. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 16. To STRICK out. To produce by collision. My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires; My manhood long misled by wand'ring fires, Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone, My pride struck out new sparks of her own. Dryden.
 17. To STRICK out. To blot; to efface. By expurgatory animadversions, we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities, and having once a conceded list, with more safety attempt their reasons. Brown.
 18. To STRICK out. To bring to light. To STRICK out. To form at once by a quick effort. Whether thy hand strike out some free design, Where life awakes and dawns at every line, Or blend in beauteous tints the colour'd mafs, And from the canvass call the mimic face. Pope.
 To STRICK v. n.
 1. To make a blow. I in mine own woe charm'd, Could not find death, where I did hear him groan; Nor feel him where he struck. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 It pleased the king To Strike at me upon his misconstruction; When he tript me behind. Shakespeare's King Lear. He wither'd all their strength before he struck. Dryden.
 2. To collide; to clash. Holding a ring by a thread in a glass, tell him that holdeth it, it shall strike so many times against the side of the glass, and no more. Bacon's Natural History.
 3. To act by repeated percussion. Bid thy mistress when my drink is ready, She strike upon the bell. Shakespeare's Macbeth. Those antique minstrels, sure, were Charles like kings, Cities their lutes, and subjects hearts their strings; On which with so divine a hand they struck, Consent of motion from their breath they took. Waller.
 4. To found by the stroke of a hammer. Caesar, 'tis strucken eight. Shakespeare. Deep thoughts will often suspend the senses so far, that about a man clocks may strike and bells ring, which he takes no notice of. Grew.
 5. To make an attack. Is not the king's name forty thousand names? Arm, arm, my name; a puny subject strikes At thy great glory. Shakespeare's Richard II. When by their designing leaders taught To strike at power, which for themselves they fought: The vulgar gull'd into rebellion arm'd, Their blood to action by their prize was warm'd. Dryden.
 6. To act by external influx. Consider the red and white colours in porphyre; hinder light but from striking on it, and its colours vanish. Locke. Whilst any trump did found, or drum struck up, His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field. Shakespeare.
 8. To be dashed upon shallows; to be stranded. The admiral galley wherein the emperor was, struck upon a sand, and there stuck fast. Kneller.

STR

9. To pass with a quick or strong effect. Now and then a glittering beam of wit or passion strikes through the obscurity of the poem: any of these effect a present liking, but not a lasting admiration. Dryden.
 10. To pay homage, as by lowering the sail. We see the wind fit fore upon our sails; And yet we strike not, but securely perish. Shakespeare. I'd rather chop this hand off at a blow, And with the other fling it at thy face, Than bear so low a sail, to strike to thee. Shakespeare. The interest of our kingdom is ready to strike to that of your poorest fishing towns: it is hard you will not accept our services. Swift.
 11. To be put by some sudden act or motion into any state; to break forth. It struck on a sudden into such reputation, that it scorned any longer to feul, but owns itself publicly. Gov. of the Tongue.
 12. To STRICK in with. To conform; to suit itself to; to join with at once. He struck on a sudden into such reputation, that it scorned any longer to feul, but owns itself publicly. Gov. of the Tongue. They catch at every shadow of relief, strike in at a venture with the next companion, and for the dead commodity be taken off, care not who be the champion. Norris. The cares or pleasures of the world strike in with every thought. He immediately struck in with them, but described this march to the temple with so much horror, that he shivered every joint. Addison's Fables.
 13. To STRICK out. To spread or rove; to make a sudden excursion. In this plain was the last general rendezvous of mankind; and from thence they were broken into companies and dispersed, the several successive generations, like the waves of the sea over-reaching one another, and striking out farther and farther upon the land. Burnet's Theory of the Earth. When a great man strikes out into a sudden irregularity, he needs not question the respect of a retinue. Collier of Popularity.
 STRIKE. n. f. A buffel; a dry measure of capacity. Wings, cartnave and buffel, peck, strike ready at hand. Tusser's Flaubury.
 STRIKEBLOCK. n. f. Is a plane shorter than the jointer, having its sole made exactly flat and straight, and is used for the flattening of a short joint. Mason's Mechanical Exercise.
 STRIKER. n. f. [from strike] One that strikes. A bishop then must be blameless, not given to wine, no striker. 1 Tim. iii. 3. He thought with his staff to have struck the striker. Swift. The striker must be dense, and in its best velocity. Dryden.
 STRIKING. par. adj. [from strike] Affecting; surprising. STRING. n. f. [from string, Saxon; string, German and Danish; stringe Dutch; stringo, Latin.]
 1. A slender rope; a small cord; any slender and flexible band; a riband; any thing tied. Any lower bullet hanging upon the other above it, must be conceived, as if the weight of it were in that point where its string touches the upper. Wilkins's Declus. Round Ormond's knee thou ty'st the mystick string. Prior.
 2. A thread on which any things are filed. Their priests pray by their beads, having a string with a hundred of nutshells upon it; and the repeating of certain words with them they account meritorious. Stillingfleet.
 3. Any set of things filed on a line. I have caught two of these dark undermining vermin, and intend to make a string of them, in order to hang them up in one of my papers. Addison's Spectator.
 4. The chord of a musical instrument. The string that jars When rudely touch'd, ungrateful to the sense, With pleasure feels the master's flying fingers, Swells into harmony, and charms the hearers. Ross. By the appearance they make in marble, there is not one string-instrument that seems comparable to our violins. Addison.
 5. A small fibre. Duckweed putteth forth a little string into the water, from the bottom. Bacon. In pulling broom up, the least strings left behind will grow. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 6. A nerve; a tendon. The most piteous tale which in recounting, His grief grew puffed, and the strings of life Began to crack. Shakespeare's King Lear. The string of his tongue loosed. Mark xxvii. 35.
 7. The nerve of the bow. The wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrows upon the string. Psalms xii. 2.
 8. Any concatenation or series, as a string of propositions. To have two strings to the bow. To have two views or two expedients; to have double advantage, or double security. No.

STR

- No lover has that pow'r To enforce a desperate amour, As he that has two strings to his bow, And burns for love and money too. Hudibras.
 To STRING. v. a. Preterite I string, part. pass. string. [from the noun.]
 1. To furnish with strings. Has not wife nature string the legs and feet With firmest nerves, design'd to walk the street? Gay.
 2. To put a stringed instrument in tune. Here the mule so oft her harp has string, That not a mountain rears its head unsung. Addison.
 3. To file on a string. Men of great learning or genius are too full to be exact; and therefore chafe to throw down their pearls in heaps before the reader, rather than be at the pains of stringing them. Speet.
 4. To make tense. Toil string the nerves, and purified the blood. Dryden.
 STRINGED. adj. [from string] Having strings; produced by strings. Praise him with stringed instruments and organs. Psalms. Divinely warbl'd voice, Answering the stringed noise, As all their souls in blissful rapture took. Milton.
 STRINGENT. adj. [from stringens, Latin.] Binding; contracting. STRINGHALT. n. f. [from string and halt.] Stringhalt is a sudden twitching and snatching up of the hinder leg of a horse much higher than the other, or an involuntary or convulsive motion of the muscles that extend or bend the hough. Farrist's Dist.
 STRINGLESS. adj. [from string] Having no strings. Nothing; all is laid; His tongue is now a stringless instrument, Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent. Shakespeare.
 STRINGY. adj. [from string] Fibrous; consisting of small threads. A plain Indian fan, made of the small stringy parts of roots spread out in a round flat form. Grew.
 To STRIP. v. a. [from stripen, Dutch; be-strippe, stripped, Sax.] To make naked; to deprive of covering. They began to strip her of her cloaths when I came in among them. Sidney. They strip Joseph out of his coat. Gen. xxxvii. 23. Scarce credible it is how soon they were stript and laid naked on the ground. Hayward.
 Hadst thou not committed Notorious murder on those thirty men At Akelton, who never did thee harm, Then like a robber strip off them of their robes. Milton. You cloath all that have no relation to you, and strip your master that gives you food. LeStrange.
 A rattling tempest through the branches went, That stript them bare. Dryden's Knights Tale.
 He saw a beauteous maid With hair dishevel'd, issuing through the shade, Strip of her cloaths. Dryden. He left the pillagers, to rapine bred, Without controul to strip and spoil the dead. Dryden. The bride was put in form to bed; He follow'd strip. Swift.
 2. To deprive; to divest. The apostle in exhorting men to contentment, although they have in this world no more than bare food and raiment, giveth us to understand that those are even the lowest of things necessary, that if we should be stript of all these things, without which we might possibly be, yet these must be left. Hosker. We strip and divest ourselves of our own will, and give ourselves entirely up to the will of God. Duppa. It is difficult to lead another by words into the thoughts of things, stripped of those specific differences we give them. Locke. One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease and affluence, not of one just stript of all those advantages, and plunged in the deepest miseries; and now fitting naked upon a dunghill. Astbury.
 3. To rob; to plunder; to pillage. That which lays a man open to an enemy, and that which strips him of a friend, equally attacks him in all those interests that are capable of being weakened by the one and supported by the other. South's Sermons.
 4. To peel; to decorticate. If the leaves or dried stalks be stripped into small straws, they arise unto amber, wax, and other electrics, no other ways than those of wheat or rye. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 5. To deprive of all. When some fond easy fathers strip themselves before they lie down to their long sleep, and settle their whole estates upon their sons, has it not been seen that the father has been requited with beggary? South's Sermons.
 6. To take off covering. He stript off his cloaths. 1 Sam. xix. 24. Logick helps us to strip off the outward disguise of things, and to behold and judge of them in their own nature. Watts.

STR

7. To cast off. His unkindness That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her To foreign calumnies, gave her dear rights To her doghearted daughter: these things sting him. Shaksf.
 8. To separate from something adheive or connected. Amongst men who examine not scrupulously their own ideas, and strip them not from the marks men use for them, but confound them with words, there must be endless dispute. Locke.
 STRIP. n. f. [Probably for stripe.] A narrow shred. These two apartments were hung in close mourning, and only a strip of bays round the other rooms. Swift.
 To STRIP. v. a. [from stripen, Dutch.] To variegate with lines of different colours. STRIPE. n. f. [from stripe, Dutch.]
 1. A lineary variation of colour. This seems to be the original notion of the word. Gardeners may have three roots among an hundred that are rare, as purple and carnation of several stripes. Bacon.
 2. A shred of a different colour. One of the most valuable trimmings of their cloaths was a long stripe sewed upon the garment, called latus clavus. Arbutnot.
 3. A weal; or discolouration made by a lash or blow. Cruelly marked him with inglorious stripes. Thomson.
 4. A blow; a lash. A body cannot be so torn with stripes, as a mind with remembrance of wicked actions. Hayward. To those that are yet within the reach of the stripes and reproofs of their own conscience; I would address that they would not seek to remove themselves from that wholesome discipline. Decay of Piety.
 STRIPPLING. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.] A youth; one in the state of adolescence. Thwart the lane, He, with two stripplings, lads, more like to run The country bale, than to commit such slaughter, Made good the passage. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 Now a strippling cherub he appears, Not of the prime, yet such as in his face Youth smil'd celestial. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Compositions on any important subjects are not matters to be wrong from poor stripplings, like blood out of the nose, or the plucking of untimely fruit. Milton on Education.
 As when young stripplings whip the top for sport, On the smooth pavement of an empty court; The wooden engine whirls. Dryden's Æneid.
 As every particular member of the body is nourished with a several qualified juice, so children and stripplings, old men and young men must have divers diets. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 To STRIVE. v. n. Preterite I strove, anciently I strived; part. pass. striven. [from streven, Dutch; striver, French.]
 1. To struggle; to labour; to make an effort. The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hosker. Many brave young minds have, through hearing the praises and eulogies of worthy men, been stirred up to affect the like commendations, and so strive to the like deserts. Spenser.
 2. To contend; to contend; to struggle in opposition to another: with against or with before the person opposed. Do as adversaries do in law; Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends. Shakespeare. Thou art caught, because thou hast striven against the Lord. Jer. l. 24.
 Strive for the truth unto death. Eccles. iv. 28. Why dost thou strive against him? Jab xxxiii. 13. Charge them that they strive not about words, to no profit. 2 Tim. ii. 14.
 Avoid contentions and strivings about the law. Tit. iii. 9. This is only warrantable conflict for the trial of our faith; so that these strivings are not a contending with superior powers. LeStrange.
 Thus does every wicked man that contemns God, who can save or destroy him who strives with his Maker. Tillotson.
 Now private pity strives with public hate, Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate. Denham.
 If intestine broils alarm the hive, For two pretenders oft for empire strive, The vulgar in divided factions jar; And murr'ring sounds proclaim the civil war. Dryden.
 3. To vie; to be comparable to; to emulate; to contend in excellence. Nor that sweet grove Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspir'd Castalian springs, might with this paradise Of Eden strive. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 STRIVER. n. f. [from strive.] One who labours; one who contends. STROKAL. n. f. An instrument used by glass makers. Bailey.
 STROKE. or Strok. O'd preterite of strike, now commonly struck. 25 L. He.